The work represented here has been done by children between the ages of six and eleven years in the Children's Art Classes of the Educational Program of The Museum of Modern Art. This exhibition attempts to show the development of children's creative power over comparatively short periods of from three to fourteen sessions. It is intended to assist parents and teachers in understanding the necessity of helping the child express his own individuality and to develop at his own rate of growth. The work includes examples of average children expressing everyday ideas and does not deal with gifted children.
