Taryn Simon: A Living Man Declared Dead and Other Chapters I-XVIII

May 2—September 3, 2012

The Robert and Joyce Menschel Gallery, third floor

New York, March 15, 2012—The Museum of Modern Art presents the first U.S. exhibition of Taryn Simon's (American, b. 1975) photographic project A Living Man Declared Dead and Other Chapters I-XVIII. This powerful, elaborately constructed photographic work was produced over a four-year period (2008–11), during which the artist travelled around the world researching and documenting the living ascendants and descendants of a single individual, or "bloodlines," and their related stories. In each of the "chapters" that make up the work, the external forces of territory, power, circumstance, or religion collide with the internal forces of psychological and physical inheritance. The subjects Simon documents include victims of genocide in Bosnia, test rabbits infected with a lethal disease in Australia, the first woman to hijack an aircraft, and the living dead in India. The exhibition is organized by Roxana Marcoci, Curator, Department of Photography, The Museum of Modern Art.

A Living Man Declared Dead is divided into 18 chapters, nine of which will be featured at MoMA. Each chapter comprises three segments. The first segment is a large portrait series systematically presenting individuals directly related by blood. The sequence of portraits is structured to include the living ascendants and descendants of a single individual. Simon also shows empty portraits, representing living members of a bloodline who could not be photographed. The portraits are followed by a text panel, in which the artist constructs narratives and collects details about the distinct bloodlines. She also notes the reasons for the absences in the portrait panel, which include imprisonment, military service, dengue fever, and women not being granted permission to be photographed. The last segment is Simon's "footnote" panel, comprising images that expand and locate the stories in each of Simon's chapters.

Ms. Marcoci says, "Simon's major project locates photography's capacity to at once probe complex narratives in contemporary societies and to organize the material in classification processes characteristic of an archive, a system that connects identity, genealogy, history, and memory." Her collection is at once cohesive and arbitrary, mapping the relationships among chance, blood, and other components of fate. In contrast to the methodical ordering of a bloodline, the central elements of the stories—violence, resilience, corruption, and survival—disorient the highly structured appearance of the work. A Living Man Declared Dead and Other Chapters I-XVIII highlights the space between text and image, absence and presence, and order and anarchy.

ABOUT THE ARTIST:

Taryn Simon was born in 1975 in New York, where she lives and works. Her previous work includes Contraband (2010), an archive of images of items that were detained or seized from passengers and mail entering the United States from abroad; An American Index of the Hidden and Unfamiliar (2007), which reveals objects, sites, and spaces that are integral to America's foundation, mythology, or daily functioning but remain inaccessible or unknown to a public audience; and The Innocents (2003), which documents cases of wrongful conviction in the United States, calling into question photography's function as a credible witness and arbiter of justice. Simon's work has been the subject of monographic exhibitions at Tate Modern, London; Neue Nationalgalerie, Berlin; Whitney Museum of American Art, New York; Museum für Moderne Kunst, Frankfurt; Kunst-Werke Institute for Contemporary Art, Berlin; and MoMA PS1, New York. A Living Man Declared Dead and Other Chapters I-XVIII was shown in its entirety at Tate Modern, London (May 25, 2011–January 2, 2012), and Neue Nationalgalerie, Berlin (September 21, 2011–January 1, 2012).

SPONSORSHIP:

Generous support for the exhibition is provided by Robert B. Menschel and by Aaron and Barbara Levine.

WEBSITE:

The exhibition will be accompanied by a website that features an in-depth presentation of all nine "chapters" of A Living Man Declared Dead and Other Chapters I-XVIII on view at MoMA. The site, MoMA.org/tarynsimon, will launch on May 2, 2012.
