SECOND EXHIBITION OF THE MUSEUM OF MODERN ART

NINETEEN LIVING AMERICANS

OPENING DECEMBER 13th, 1929

The first exhibition of the Museum of Modern Art, comprising one hundred works by Cezanne, Gauguin, van Gogh and Seurat came to its close December 7th. Over 47,000 people came to the exhibition, numbers increasing rather than diminishing as the four weeks passed. The last day 5300 people crowded the Gallery. In addition to the ordinary attendance of the day special groups of students from Columbia, Barnard, New York University as well as numbers of artists, came during the evenings.

The second exhibition of the Museum of Modern Art, open to the public on Friday, December 13th, will be devoted to paintings by Nineteen Living Americans. The invitation opening will be held Thursday, December 12th.

The nineteen painters are:

Charles E. Burchfield
Charles Demuth
Preston Dickinson
Lyonel Feininger
Pop Hart
Edward Hopper
Bernard Karfiol
Rockwell Kent
Walt Kuhn
Yasue Kuniyoshi
Ernest Lawson
John Marin
Kenneth Hayes Miller
Georgia O'Keeffe
Jules Pascin
John Sloan
Eugene Speicher
Maurice Sterne
Max Weber

The list was drawn up in the following manner. Lists of over a hundred of the better known American painters were distributed among the trustees of the Museum. Each trustee was asked to check the fifteen painters whom he thought should be shown in the first American exhibition adding the names of painters not on the list. The resulting consensus was carefully studied
