

The Museum of Modern Art

11 West 53 Street, New York, N.Y. 10019 Circle 5-8900 Cable: Modernart

May 1964

PHILIP C. JOHNSON

Architect of the remodeled and greatly expanded Museum of Modern Art, Philip C. Johnson was the first Director of the Museum's Department of Architecture in 1932 and ever since has been closely associated with the institution. In 1949, he designed the Grace Rainey Rogers Annex to the Museum at 21 West 53rd Street and in 1953-54 he was responsible for the Museum's Abby Aldrich Rockefeller Sculpture Garden and the adjacent Garden Restaurant.

Mr. Johnson has been the recipient of numerous professional honors for his work. In 1960, he and Ludwig Miés van der Rohe were awarded the Gold Medal of Honor of the Architectural League of New York for their design of the Seagram Building at 375 Park Avenue in New York. His own Glass House in New Canaan, Connecticut, was awarded the Silver Medal of Honor by the Architectural League in 1950, and the Hodgson House in New Canaan, Connecticut, was awarded the First Prize at the São Paulo Bienal in 1954. In 1961, he was presented with two First Honor Awards by the American Institute of Architects for his Roofless Church in New Harmony, Indiana, and for the building housing the Atomic Reactor which he designed for the State of Israel.

Earlier this spring, the newest addition to Mr. Johnson's long list of architectural achievements -- The New York State Theater at Lincoln Center -- opened to the public.

As the first Director of the Museum's Department of Architecture, Mr. Johnson was responsible for a program of exhibitions and publications which defined the standards and recorded the history of modern architecture and design. The first exhibition organized by the Department, Modern Architecture: International Exhibition, introduced the International Style in architecture to this country.

more...

